

Eric Whitney is the news director at Montana Public Radio. He got started in community radio at KDUR and has worked in public radio news for 22 years, including stints at KOTO, KSUT, KRCC and Colorado Public Radio. Eric helped to launch the western Colorado regional news program Thin Air, and to create the full-time RMCR capitol reporter position.

Eric also worked for the regional High Plains News Service, and has spent several years freelancing, including a year in Cape Town, South Africa. Prior to taking his current position, he spent 18 months freelancing health policy stories full time for NPR and Kaiser Health News. He has filed dozens of features and hundreds of newscast spots for NPR, Marketplace, Living On Earth, National Native News and other outlets.

Eric is a Colorado native and remembers the days of cutting reel tape with a razor blade.
