Summer 2008 interns on the way
May 21st, 2008

Nearly 50 Summer 2008 interns descend on NPR's offices in Washington DC, New York City and Culver City California starting June 2. Overseeing Intern Edition this summer will be Executive Producer April Fehling, a graduate student at the University of Maryland. Intern Edition's Managing Editor this summer is Jessie Gasch, who just graduated from Truman State University.

Next Gen in North Carolina
May 21st, 2008

Six students from around North Carolina developed stories for the next gen project at NPR station WUNC in Chapel Hill in May. One student blogged and built web content. The others did their own radio pieces.

Media Shift – Shifting Media
May 12th, 2008

Next Gen Project Manager Doug Mitchell and Technical Advisor Tom Krymkowski recently talked with PBS.org blogger Mark Glaser. They discussed the need for speed versus methodical learning of tools and style.

A Message from Executive Producer Emily Schmill

Forty-nine voices converge this summer at a focal point for government and politics - Washington D.C. - to bolster the good work at National Public Radio. Correspondents are posted on the West coast and in Chicago. We are here because we can appreciate the role of public radio in tumultuous times. We can expose injustice and remain fair. We can be compelling without being offensive. We are able to entertain the ideas of all sides without submitting to any.

Over the course of the summer I invite listeners to check back often. You can learn about the interns by listening to their aural biographies, and peruse our treasured story and idea index at Summer in the City.

Our show premieres August 10.

Until then,
Emily Schmill
Executive Producer
