FROM ALAN

ALAN CHARTOCK

This, as always, is where the rubber hits the road. Monday, February 1st is where and when we gather as a group to see whether we still have the will to keep WAMC going; so far, so good. We need a million dollars three times a year to make it happen. That's a lot of money and the fact that we can do it makes us the talk of the nation. Some of our colleagues just don't believe it. That's because this is more than a radio station. It is a group of people who are intellectually curious and committed to ethical behavior. When someone calls me up and tries to typecast us, either on the right or the left, the first thing I ask is whether they'd like to do a commentary, laying out a position on a contemporary problem.

You should see the crew who works here. Everyone is committed to their jobs. Many of the folks who toil here could earn more money elsewhere but they stay because this place is one of the last surviving media institutions with listeners who are truly committed to it on a number of emotional and substantive levels.

Some of our love for the place is conceptual but a lot is practical. The other morning I left home in Great Barrington at 3 AM for Albany, as I do every day. A few snowflakes were falling but about fifteen minutes out, the snow turned into a storm the likes of which I had never seen. The snow was so severe that I couldn't see an inch in front of me. So I was going over the mountain roads that connect Great Barrington to the Berkshire Spur and Albany. I was scared -- this was the worst single snowstorm I have ever been in. The road twists and turns all over the place but I crept along at about a mile an hour and the comforting voices of the BBC kept me going. It took me almost two hours to get to work but my friend, WAMC, was with me all the way.

Once during a fund drive, someone called in a donation. She had just arrived for a new job. She didn't have a friend. The volunteer handed me a slip with the new member's message. While I can't remember the exact words, it said something like, "I was a bit depressed. I landed in my unfurnished apartment. I missed my parents and my friends and I plugged in my radio. I heard WAMC and I knew I had a friend." That was a number of years ago but I never forgot it. I just felt the love coming from that piece of paper.

Every drive has moments like that. We all remember the time someone called in and pledged twenty five cents with the notation, "This is what I think WAMC is worth." Then the strangest thing happened. I read what he said and then everyone started adding twenty five cents to their pledge. It continued for the rest of the drive. Some thought it was hilarious. I got wet around the eyes. What a group we are.

Then there was the time during the Iraq invasion that a man went into one of the malls and purchased a tee shirt from a store in the mall. It had the message, "Peace on Earth, Good-will to Men" on it and he was promptly arrested by mall authorities for political protesting which was strictly forbidden under mall rules. The poor guy was led away in handcuffs. Well, as soon as we heard the news we talked about it a lot during the fund drive. It was one of those moments you never forget. The phones rang and rang.

So, here we go again; once more unto the breach. We're all in this together. We can't do it without you. We're counting on you.

FEBRUARY PROGRAM NOTES

KRISTIN GILBERT

The month of February kicks off with our fund drive beginning February 1st at 6 a.m. Help us to make this the shortest fund drive in WAMC history! Your continuing support allows us to keep bringing you the programming you love. Call 1(800)323-9262 or pledge online at WAMC.org. We couldn't do it without you!

Throughout February and in early March, WAMC will air NPR's special live coverage of the first five major contests of the 2016 presidential candidate nomination process. On Monday, February 1st, hosts Ari Shapiro and Audie Cornish will anchor coverage of the Iowa Caucuses. New Hampshire's live event will start at 8 p.m. on Tuesday, February 9th. Ari Shapiro and Michel Martin will host coverage of the GOP South Carolina primary on Saturday, February 20th starting at 8 p.m.

We have some exciting special programs coming up this month to honor Black History Month and President's Day. Our celebration begins with King Stories, February 15th at 9 a.m. King Stories is a one-hour documentary of captivating stories told by friends and associates who were intimately involved with the life of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Host Julian Bond, along with insiders—Ralph Abernathy, David Garrow, Dick Gregory, Mark Lane and Larry Williams—share rarely documented stories about the personal and private sides of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. At 10 a.m. we will enjoy State of the Re:Union-Leadership from the Bottom Up A Black History Month Special. Usually during Black History Month, we remember civil rights icons and reflect upon their legacy. Over the past couple of years, State of the Re:Union has met a new generation of African American leaders, the people you may not see on TV specials or making nationally acclaimed speeches. Most of these men and women are on the front lines of their communities, rolling up their sleeves and diving in to what can be unglamorous work. In this episode, we would like to introduce you to this group of leaders and what they're accomplishing in their various corners of America. The celebration continues with encore broadcasts of our award winning Power of Words series at 11 a.m. and 2 p.m.

Coming up on February 19th, at 11 a.m. it's Race and the Space Race. The Space Age began when America was going through a wrenching battle over civil rights and because the heart of the old Confederacy was chosen as its base, NASA played an unintended role in civil rights history. In this program, we hear how this happened and we hear the stories of the people who broke the color line at NASA. Produced by Richard Paul with Soundprint and narrated by Mae Jemison, the first African-American woman in Space; Race and the Space Race tells the unlikely relationship between civil rights and the space program.

ARE ELECTION YEARS GOOD FOR STOCKS?

■ TOM BROCKLEY

Provided by RBC Wealth Management and Thomas E. Brockley

With a little more than a year to go until the next presidential election, one can say campaign season is well underway. As a citizen, you may well be quite interested in both the process and, of course, the outcome – but as an investor, how might you be affected?

Consider this: In the last eleven presidential election years, the market (as measured by the Dow Jones Industrial Average) has been up nine times and down twice. Based on that data, one might assume that their portfolio will fare well in 2016. But, as you've no doubt seen in the small print: "Past performance doesn't guarantee future results." That's certainly true of performance during an election year. No matter what happened the last time around, you can't count on positive results next year.

Many people tend to forget that when the White House is up for grabs, every congressional seat – as well as many in the Senate -- is up for re-election, too. The incumbents running for those seats spend a lot of time campaigning and, as a result, fewer substantive laws are generally made. Whether this inactivity is good for the country as a whole is debatable, but it tends to be a positive for the financial markets, which typically dislike surprises, changes and new direction. Consequently, stocks tend to fare pretty well during presidential election years.

Still, some investors get jittery over how a candidate's promises or plans might affect particular sectors within the financial markets. And if a candidate with particularly worrisome ideas is ahead in the polls, you may see investors flock to or away from the companies, or industries, that most likely to be affected by a new president's political agenda. But investors would be wise to remember that campaign promises have been known to fade away when the election is over. And, in any case, a president's priorities still have to be turned into legislation to have any real impact.

Instead of counting on historical trends in election years, or making moves based on campaign rhetoric, investors should follow an investment strategy built on solid principles. Here are a few suggestions:

- Diversify. If you essentially own just one asset class, such as growth stocks, your portfolio could take a big hit during a market decline. But during that same downturn, other types of investments might not fare nearly as badly – in fact, some might even do well. So, by spreading your dollars among growth stocks, international stocks, U.S. Treasury securities, corporate bonds, certificates of deposit, real estate (possibly in the form of real estate investment trusts, or REITS) and other investment vehicles, you can help reduce the effects of market volatility on your portfolio, while giving yourself more opportunities for success.

- Don't invest too conservatively – or too aggressively. If you are, by nature, a conservative investor, you might primarily want to own investments such as certificates of deposit and money market funds. These vehicles offer significant protection of principal, but little in the way of return. Conversely, if you are an aggressive investor, you might lean more toward growth stocks and other securities that offer potentially high returns; in exchange, you're willing to accept the price volatility that comes with these investments. Try to find some middle ground between “conservative” and “aggressive” so that your portfolio can help you progress toward your long-term goals, such as a comfortable retirement, without subjecting you to undue risk.

- Be a “tax-smart” investor. Investment-related taxes can eat into your returns, so it pays to follow a “tax-smart” strategy. For example, if you hold investments for at least one year before selling them, your profits will be taxed at the long-term capital gains rate, which is 15% for most taxpayers. But if you’re a frequent trader, and you sell investments you’ve held for less than a year, you’ll be taxed at your personal income tax rate, which may be considerably higher than 15%. Another tax-smart move is to contribute as much as you can afford to tax-deferred retirement accounts, such as your 401(k) and traditional IRA. If you’re eligible to contribute to a Roth IRA, your earnings grow tax-free, provided you’ve had your account at least five years and you don’t start taking withdrawals until you’re 59-1/2.

Presidents come and go, as does their impact on the financial markets. But no one has greater control over your investment success than you — so elect to make the decisions based on your portfolio and your priorities, not who you think will be sitting in the White House next fall.

FIVE TIMELY FINANCIAL RESOLUTIONS FOR 2016

 TOM BROCKLEY

Provided by RBC Wealth Management and Thomas E. Brockley

The start of a new year is a time to reflect on the past and ponder possibilities for the future. From a financial perspective, two things become clear: you have important goals as an investor and you need a plan to help you meet those goals. So when you make your list of New Year’s resolutions for 2016, consider the following suggestions:

1. Increase your retirement contributions. With every new year, you are one year closer to retirement. Contribute now for 2015 with one easy contribution. (The deadline is April 15, 2016.) The 2015 contribution limit for Traditional and Roth IRAs is $5,500 and may include an additional $1,000 “catch-up” opportunity for individuals age 50 and older. If an employer-sponsored retirement plan is available to you, consider contributing up to the maximum amount allowed.
2. Implement an asset allocation plan. The underlying principle of asset allocation is to diversify your investment portfolio among several different asset classes in an effort to reduce the risk and volatility of your overall portfolio — and potentially improve your overall returns. Even if you’ve already constructed a plan, changes to your investment profile such as time horizon or risk tolerance may require adjustments to your asset allocation plan. Plus, the plan you established last year may not be appropriate this year as a result of economic fluctuations or changes in your personal or financial circumstances.

3. Review your life insurance policy. Life insurance is often overlooked when reviewing your entire financial picture. If you own life insurance, it is important to review your policy on a regular basis to ensure you are taking advantage of competitive premiums, have updated your beneficiaries, and are properly protecting those most important to you. Your life is changing all the time, and you need to make sure your insurance keeps up with it.

4. Open a college savings account. If funding a child's or grandchild's college education is on your mind, it's never too early to start saving. Section 529 plans offer a simple yet effective way to save for the rising cost of higher education. And they offer a variety of important features and benefits. For starters, anyone can establish a Section 529 plan, as there are no adjusted gross income limits or age restrictions. In addition, Section 529 plans are flexible. While low initial investment and subsequent contributions may be required, at the same time more substantial deposits can be made. You can contribute up to $70,000 per beneficiary ($140,000 for married individuals filing jointly) in the first year of a five-year period without incurring any federal gift-tax consequences, provided you do not make any additional gifts to the same beneficiary in the same five-year period. Moreover, your investment will grow tax-deferred and can be withdrawn tax free if the money is used for post-secondary qualified educational expenses. Section 529 plans generally offer a variety of different investment options. When you move money into a Section 529 plan, it is moved out of your taxable estate but remains under your control as the account owner. You may change beneficiaries to another member of the beneficiary's family once a year, so more than one person in your life could benefit from your gift.

5. Start planning your legacy. Now is the time to think about how you want to share your wealth and define how you want to be remembered by future generations. We collaborate with a broad range of trust service providers that help us deliver tailored trust solutions, including special needs trusts. We can help you select trust structures that focus on your specific circumstances and help you accomplish a variety of other important wealth management goals as well.

What do you want to accomplish financially in 2016?

Take some time to consider these suggestions and make a New Year's resolution to keep your investment plan consistent with your needs

RBC Wealth Management does not provide tax or legal advice. All decisions regarding the tax implications of your investments should be made in connection with your independent tax advisor.

Please consult your financial advisor if you have questions about your specific investment opportunities or financial circumstances. Not all options may be appropriate or available for all individuals.

For more information regarding college savings plans, please visit www.collegesavings.org. Participation in a 529 Plan does not guarantee the investment return on contributions, if any, will be adequate to cover future tuition and other higher education expenses. State programs vary and therefore you should carefully review individual program documents before investing or sending money. Federal income tax on the earnings and a 10 percent penalty on distributions for non-qualified expenses may apply. RBC Wealth Management is not a tax advisor. All decisions regarding the tax implications of your individual investments should be made in connection with your independent tax advisor.

04 Hey Marseilles—singer Matt Bishop, guitarist Nick Ward, keyboardist Philip Kobernik, cellist Sam Anderson, violinist Jacob Anderson makes some of the most good-natured chamber-pop music around. They make the most of a wide array of warm sounds, from cello and viola to horns and accordions, but those ingredients are all wisely wrapped around songwriting that exudes sweet, hooky sunshine. Hey Marseilles have capitalized on the success of other folk-based bands such as Mumford & Sons and The Lumineers while still aiming to keep their music sounding original. The Linda is proud to present the Seattle band in what will surely be one of our more memorable offerings.

12 Foghorn Stringband with special guests Mike & Ruthy.

Credited for igniting the Old Time Renaissance in Northwest, Foghorn Stringband continues to stand out as the shining gold standard for American Stringband music. Seven albums, thousand of shows and over a decade of touring under their belts, it's no surprise they have two entirely new generations of old-time musicians following their lead. Through all of this, they've never let the music grow cold; instead they've been steadily proving that American Roots music is a never-ending well of inspiration.

WOMEN WITH VOICES PRESENTS - "2014"

13 The play 2014 is thought provoking n its intent is to make you examine yourself and society as a whole! "2014" was written to address the rise of social injustice on various levels! As we attempt to make change remember...power is always in numbers! United we shall stand or divided we shall fall!

AUTISM IN LOVE

18 Unfortunately, when it comes to romantic relationships, people with autism have a distinct disadvantage. Being plagued by this developmental disorder jeopardizes the core characteristics of a relationship - communication and social interaction. Ostensibly it seems that some may never truly experience romantic love, or at least love by a typical definition. However, we know this to be false. We have innumerable instances of people with autism falling in love and having meaningful romantic relationships.
