WFAE Announces the 2017 Roger & Marilyn Sarow Diversity Fellows

Charlotte, NC (May 22, 2017) – This summer, WFAE welcomes Crystal Hogue and Leanna Pough as the recipients of the Roger and Marilyn Sarow Fellowship for Diversity in Public Radio. Both will work in WFAE’s news department. Hogue will be a reporter and Pough will work with the producers of Charlotte Talks.

Named in honor of Roger Sarow who was president and general manager of WFAE for 27 years and his wife Marilyn, the Roger and Marilyn Sarow Fellowship for Diversity in Public Radio offers a 10-week fellowship to a college student or recent college graduate of diverse ethnicity who wants to explore a career in public media journalism.

“As Charlotte continues to benefit from an increasingly diverse community, it is vital that WFAE reflects that positive change,” said WFAE President and CEO Joe O’Connor. “The Roger and Marilyn Sarow Fellowship for Diversity in Public Radio allows WFAE to play an active role in training the next generation of journalists to help further our commitment to inclusion.”

Hogue’s focus will be on spot reporting and features as well as honing her writing and reporting skills, on-air delivery and use of sound. Hogue will be a senior at North Carolina A&T State University in Greensboro, N.C., where she is majoring in journalism and mass communications. She has worked at the university’s student radio station and television studio. Hogue recently served as treasurer of the student chapter of the National Association of Black Journalists.

Pough will train in all aspects of producing a daily talk show, which includes pitching show ideas, researching topics, selecting guests, booking shows, finding audio to include in the broadcast, and operating audio equipment during the show. A 2015 graduate of UNC Charlotte with a degree in communication, Pough has been working in the public relations office at UNC Charlotte. She was also an intern for the arts and culture website Charlotte Viewpoint.

The Sarows believe strongly that public media newsrooms must do their best to reflect the diverse communities they serve. The fellowship fund was established in their honor to encourage more aspiring journalists from diverse ethnic backgrounds to be involved in public media as they begin their careers.
